

X.

Moses, ib.; signs an exemption of duties for the convent of Sinai, ib., n.; returns to Suez, ib.; returns to Cairo, 166; raises loans through the medium of Mr. James, ib.; expects an invasion from the Ottoman Porte, 167; plans the expedition against Syria, ib.; his reconciliation to Berthier, 168; commences the march to Syria, 169; his jealousy, 170; Bourrienne's reasonings to, 171; reason for his dislike of Junot, 172; discontent of his troops, 173; surrender of El-Arish, ib.; rests at Ramleh, 174; the siege of Jaffa, 176; gives it up to pillage, ib.; his reproach to Beau-harnais and Croisier, 177; council assembled to determine what to do with the prisoners, ib.; their sentence, 179; his own account of the massacre, 180, n.; destruction of the troops by the plague, 181; reproaches General Lannes, 182; arrives at St. Jean d'Acre, ib.; siege of, ib.; his reproaches against Sir Sydney Smith, 183; his friendship for General Caffarelli, 185; raises the siege, 188; confident of success, 189; his plans, 190; leaves St. Jean d'Acre, 191; his letter to General Dugua, ib.; dreadful situation of the army, 192; his orders respecting the wounded, 193; loss of the cannon, 194; his life attempted, ib.; returns to Jaffa, ib.; visits the hospital, 195; potion given to those infected with the plague, ib.; remark of, 196; report drawn up under his superintendence, 197; his defence of the treatment of those infected with the plague, 198; arrives at Cairo, 200; false proclamations, ib.; hears of the descent of MouradBey, 202; his opinion of him, 203; leaves Cairo for the Pyramids, 203; his letters to Marmont, General Dugua, and General Desaix, 204; arrives at Alexandria, 205; battle of, ib.; his communication with the English, 206; determined to leave Egypt, ib.; embarks for France, 207; his dissimulation, ib.; reasons for quitting Egypt, ib.; communications with France while in Egypt, 208, n.; his letter to Kleber, 210; orders to Admiral Gantheaume, 212; fear of the English, 213; his amusements, ib.; his reception at Ajaccio, 215; want of money, 216; hears of the battle of JS"ovi, ib.; leaves Ajaccio, 217; alarmed at the sight of the English squadron, ib.; enters France, 219; effect produced by his return, 220; accusations against him, ib.; his ambitious views, 223; influence of popular applause on him, ib.; reception of Josephine, 224, 225; their reconciliation, 226; his opinion of Bernadotte, 228; of Moreau, ib.; his interview with Bernadotte, 230; speaks against the Manege Club, 232; invites himself to breakfast with Bernadotte, 233; anecdote of, 235; dinner given to, by the Council of Five Hundred, 236; his wish to become a Director, ib.; animosity between him and Sieves, 237; becomes friendly with him, 238; Barras's accusation against, ib.; his overtures to Cambaceres and Lebrun, 239; deceives G-ohier, 240; meeting of generals at his house, 241; command of the army given to, 242; message from the Council of Ancients to, ib.; reviews the troops in the Tuileries, 243; remark on Bernadotte, 245; enters the Council of Ancients, 246; his address to them, ib.; leaves the hall, 248; proceeds to the Council of Five Hundred, 250; tumult in consequence, 251; dissolves it, 253; address to the inhabitants of Paris, 254; remodels the Council of Five Hundred, 255; appointed First Consul, 256; returns to Paris, 257; money paid to, by M. Collot, 261; his ingratitude, ib.; releases M. Gohier, ib.; installs himself in the Luxembourg, ib.; forms a new constitution, ib.; his love of integrity, 262; forms a ministry, 263; his Minister of War, ib., n.; conversation respecting M. Moreau de Worms, 265; his kindness to him, 266; character of Sieyes, ib.; his apartments at the Luxembourg, ib.; his distribution of the day, 267; dread of the Bourbons, 268; scrupulous in granting places, 269; remark to Bourrienne, ib.; wishes to make peace, 270; his negotiations with England, 271; with Austria, 272; their failure, ib.; his views in the East, 273; obtains possession of Kle'ber's letter to the Directory, 274; charges against in, ib.; proclamation to the army in the East, 275; satisfaction on account of K16-ber's death, 275, n.; falsehoods stated against, 276; praise of Kle'ber, ib., n.; portrait of, 277; singular habits of, 278; habits in dictation, 279, n.; of repose, 280, n.; while dressing, 281, n.; at table, 282, n.; night labors, 283, n.; his personal neatness, 283; love of glory, ib.; improve-ments in the Tuileries, 284, n.; his senti-ments towards France, 285; his ill opinion of mankind, 286; remarks on his temper, 287; his character of Duroc, ib.; his sudden angers, 288, n.; opinions of the murderers of Louis XVI., 289, n.; anecdotes of, 280, 290; amusements at Halmaison,